PRINCESS

Tiana's Friendship Fix-up

Charlotte rummaged through her wardrobe.
“I’ve got nothing new to wear, Tia. We need to go shopping.”

Tiana groaned. "I hardly have time to sit, let alone shop, Lottie."

Charlotte pouted. "Oh, you're always so busy with your restaurant and Prince Naveen," she said. "You're my best friend, Tia. I just want to spend time with you."

Charlotte had a point. Tiana had been beyond busy. "All right," Tiana said. "We can go shopping." Then she put her fingers in her ears as Charlotte squealed in delight.

To start, Charlotte led Tiana to the Bayou Boutique and tried on a big, pink dress. "Isn't this darling?" Charlotte asked.

"That's swell, Lottie," Tiana replied.
"Shall we get it and go?"

But Charlotte wasn't finished.
She tried on lots more dresses before she made up her mind.

"And there's one more thing," she said. "We need a dress for you!"

“But I love the dresses Mama made for me,” Tiana said.
“I don’t need another.”

“There’s always room for a new dress,” Charlotte said.
“How about this one?”

“But, Lottie ...” Tiana said.
“This one?” Charlotte interrupted.

"Thanks, Lottie," Tiana said, hurrying out of the shop. "I know you're trying, but the restaurant is about to open. I have to go."

Both Tiana and Charlotte felt bad about how things had gone during their shopping trip. Neither liked disappointing the other. So, the next day, they apologized.

“Phew, I’m glad that’s over,” Charlotte said, “because I have another brilliant idea about how we can spend time together!”

"I'll help you!" Charlotte said. "Won't that be fun?"

Tiana wasn't so sure, but she thought she should at least give it a try. She showed Charlotte how to make beignets –

– and Charlotte did a great job.
“Can you handle making the rest?”
asked Tiana.

“Is my daddy’s name Big Daddy?”
Charlotte said.

After Tiana left, Charlotte heated up a pan of oil. Soon it was time to fry the dough. She dropped each one in and – Whooooosh! After the smoke cleared,

Tiana saw the beignets. “Oh, Lottie!
What did you do?”

Charlotte couldn’t explain herself.
This wasn’t how she wanted things to go.
She started to cry.

When she got home, Charlotte moaned.

She complained.

But most of all, she missed her best friend.

Meanwhile, Tiana grimaced.

She grumbled.

Then she missed her best friend, too.

That night, both Charlotte and Tiana knew they had to find each other.
Tiana spotted Charlotte in front of the bright lights of the theatre.

They hugged. "I'm sorry," Charlotte cried.

"Me, too," Tiana said. "I want to spend time with you, Lottie, but maybe shopping or cooking isn't it."

"I agree," Charlotte said.
"So what can we do?"

“Why don’t we see a show?” Tiana suggested. “It’s one of our favourites!”

“I think that’s a wonderful idea,” Charlotte said.

After the show, Tiana said, "That was amazing."

"Indeed!" Charlotte smiled. "But the way your mama told the story when we were girls is still the best."

Tiana knew she and Charlotte wouldn't agree with each other all the time, but they'd always agree on what mattered: being best friends forever!

PRINCESS

Snow White and the Three Giants

Since meeting the Dwarfs long ago, Snow White knew the path to their cottage well. But one day, she was so busy talking to the woodland creatures, she took a wrong turn.

She arrived at a very different cottage instead.

At first, Snow White didn't notice ...

... but then she stepped inside.
"Oh my!" Snow White exclaimed.

Instead of a neat row of seven little chairs, she saw three enormous chairs.

Instead of the cosy kitchen she knew so well,
a fire roared and crackled in an enormous hearth.

Then, just as Snow White discovered the enormous dining table, the ground began to shake.

"Oh no!" she gasped.

With a groan, the door opened and in came three of the tallest people
Snow White had ever seen in her life.
They lumbered straight toward her.

What should I do now? thought Snow White.

Snow White cleared her throat and stepped into view.
“Excuse me,” she said.
The giants jumped back in surprise.

“I’m sorry,” Snow White continued,
“I let myself in by mistake.”

“Oh!” said the largest giant.
“You scared us. We don’t get visitors often.”

“But now that you’re here,” said the least-big giant, “you should join us for dinner.”

The least-big giant helped Snow White climb up on to his chair. "You'll need some cushions," he said.

"And here is a small plate and a glass," said the middle-sized giant.

"Thank you," said Snow White.
"You're all so kind!"

The next day, back at home, Snow White told the Dwarfs about her adventures.

“G-G-Giants?!” stammered Bashful.

Sleepy yawned. “Aren’t they dangerous?”

“Not at all,” Snow White replied.

"Don't trust them!" Grumpy said.
"You can't trust anyone that tall."

"But I'm taller than you, and you trust me!"
Snow White said. "Well, you'll just have to meet them and see for yourself."

Back at the castle, Snow White wrote 10 party invitations and made a list of the delicious food she'd make. All she needed now was a fun party game....

On the day of the party, Snow White announced, “We’re going to play Snap. I’ll point out something about me, and if it’s true for you, shout ‘Snap!’
And then it’s someone else’s turn.”

“Oh, I love games like this,” chuckled Doc.

“Here we go,” said Snow White, thinking for a moment.

“I have two eyes.”

"Snap!" yelled the Dwarfs.
"Snap!" yelled the giants.

Snow White turned to Bashful, who was up next.

“Um, I have two ears.”

“Snap!” called the Dwarfs. “Snap!” called the giants.

It was the largest giant’s turn.

“Ahem, I have one nose.”

"Snap!" shouted the Dwarfs.
"Snap!" shouted the giants.

"I guess we have a lot in common after all," Grumpy muttered.

“Yes, you do!” said Snow White.
“And there’s one more thing you have in common ... you are all my friends!”

PRINCESS

Belle and the Perfect Pearl

"What do you suppose is behind these doors, Chip?" Belle asked the enchanted teacup.

"Books!" Chip replied.

Belle threw open the doors. "I knew it. More beautiful adventures – tucked away and forgotten!" she said.

It wasn't that the Beast didn't use the library. But when he did, he always read the same book.

“My library is your library,” the Beast liked to remind Belle. “Read and enjoy any book you find.”

It hadn’t been long since Belle had agreed to stay at the castle in return for her father’s freedom. But each day she was getting to know the Beast better. She was starting to think that he actually cared about her happiness.

So Belle took the Beast at his word and made herself at home in the library. On many days, she spent hours there, reading book after book, losing all track of time.

Belle considered books priceless treasures. So when she took a break from reading, she gave the books special attention. Belle asked Featherduster to help her dust them.

She placed fallen books back on the shelves.

She pressed flat any folded pages.

One morning, Belle noticed the Beast had left his favourite book lying open on the arm of his chair.
“That’s not good for the binding,” Belle said.

She picked up the book, closed it, then turned it over in her hands. Although the leather cover was worn, it was a beautiful volume with decorative gems on its brass clasp.

"Chip, look!" she said, pointing at the pearls. There was an empty hole where a fourth one should be.

Hmmm, thought Belle. How long has it been missing?

Belle looked around on the floor, in case it had only just fallen out.

Chip helped her search. "I found something!" he called. There by the library door was a single, perfect pearl.

"Let's see if it fits," Belle suggested.

She dropped the pearl into the hole in the clasp.
“Just right!” said Chip.

But the pearl was loose and wouldn't stay put.

"I have an idea," Belle said. "This book is obviously your master's favourite. I'll fix it up a bit at a time. As the finishing touch, I'll reattach the pearl."

"Then you can surprise him!" Chip cried.

Belle nodded. She was happy to do something nice for the Beast.

Belle got right to work. She borrowed some rags and polish from Mrs Potts and gently cleaned the leather cover. Then she put the book back on the Beast's chair so he wouldn't miss it.

But when the Beast came into the library, he didn't pick up his book. He seemed to be looking for something.

"Can I help?" Belle asked.

"NO!" he bellowed. Then, more quietly, he added, "I mean, no. Excuse me." Without another word, he left the room.

Belle was startled but shrugged it off, assuming the Beast's bad mood would pass.

That afternoon, Belle did some more work on the book. Carefully, she smoothed out rumpled pages and polished the brass clasp.

"I can see myself!" Chip said.

Again, Belle put the book back in its place on the Beast's chair.

Later that evening, Belle passed the Beast in the hall. She smiled and stopped to greet him. "Good evening –"

"Good night!" he snapped, hurrying by.

Belle stood there, a bit stunned. He hadn't even glanced her way.

Is something the matter? she wondered.

The next morning, it was time for Belle to add the pearl. But she wasn't sure she was ready to give the book to the Beast. He had been so grouchy the day before.

What will he be like today? she wondered.

Just then, the Beast burst through the door. "You?" he cried. "You've had the pearl all along? I've been everywhere trying to find it!"

"Well, why didn't you say so!" Belle shouted, then she tossed the pearl on to the table. "By the way, I've been repairing your book as a surprise."

The Beast was shocked.
He looked at the book. He picked up the pearl. Then he smiled – and began to laugh.

Belle stormed towards the door.

"Belle, wait," the Beast said. His gentle voice made Belle stop and turn. "I've been working on something for you, too."

In the Beast's hand was a lovely antique pin. "It's been in my family a long time," he explained. "I wanted you to have it. But first, I had something to add."

He placed the pearl on the pin, at the base of the rose. It fitted perfectly.

“I removed the pearl from my book yesterday,” he said. “But I must have dropped it on my way out and –” He looked down. “I’m sorry I blamed you.”

Now it was Belle’s turn to laugh. “Well, I’m sorry I stole your surprise.”

Belle pinned the gold rose with the perfect pearl to her dress. Then she watched as the Beast noticed his book's shining brass clasp, polished cover and smooth pages.

"Thank you, Belle," he said. "You've made it new."

Belle and the Beast still had much to learn about one another. But their hearts were in the right place.

PRINCESS

Merida and the Missing Gem

"Ach!" Merida complained. "I spent all month working on a fancy brooch for Mum. But her birthday's tomorrow and it's still not right!"

Maudie clucked in sympathy, but didn't reply. As cook and nursemaid at Castle DunBroch, she was more worried about her latest batch of hot muffins.

"Mm! Who are those for?" asked Merida.

"Don't touch! These are for the DunBroch Brownie, the wee elf that lives outside the gate. He keeps things right in our castle," Maudie replied.

"Have you ever seen him?"

"Brownies don't like to be seen by humans," explained Maudie.

“But every day I leave him muffins,
milk – and thistles for good luck.
If the Brownie isn’t happy, who knows what mischief he could make?
Especially with the queen’s birthday tomorrow.”

Merida sighed again, thinking about her mum's birthday. The brooch had started as a good idea. Merida chose a beautiful smoky quartz, her mother's favourite gem. Then she designed the setting herself. But when it was all put together, it didn't seem right.

Maybe, she thought, she should take another look at the gem....

But it was gone!

Then Merida saw her brothers' guilty faces.
The wee devils must have taken it!

Merida quickly realized what had happened.
Her brothers hadn't meant to cause trouble.
They'd only 'borrowed' the brooch because it had looked so royal on their capes.

But somehow, as they played, the brooch had become lost.

“Oh, come now lads!” said Merida. “You must have dropped it somewhere. Think!”

Merida looked more closely at Hubert's shirt.

"Is this a thistle?" she asked. Then she looked at the others. "Are those crumbs on your shoes? Is that milk on your face?"

Suddenly, Merida had a very good idea where the triplets had been playing that morning.

Merida led the boys down near the gate, under the bridge, to a large, flat rock.

“Just as I thought,” Merida said. “You ate the treats that Maudie made for the DunBroch Brownie!” She nodded. “So now we know where you lost the gem.”

Merida and her brothers looked all around the clearing ... but they couldn't find the brooch.

Merida had another thought. "What if the Brownie took the brooch because you three ate his treats? Maudie said he makes mischief if he isn't taken care of."

Quickly, she gave each of the boys different tasks.

Hamish got more muffins.

Hubert got more milk.

Harris got more thistles.

And Merida tidied up the clearing.

Merida set up the tray and rearranged the thistle bouquet.

The boys looked at each other. They weren't so sure about Brownies.

But Merida had no doubts. She told her brothers to hide and be still.

Nothing happened.

Then Merida remembered that Brownies don't like humans to see them. So she tried something else.

“DunBroch Brownie,” Merida whispered into the air, “we’re sorry your treats were taken! But we tried to fix everything. Could you help us, in return?”

There was only silence. Finally, they opened their eyes.
And then Harris spotted something shiny in the crook of a tree – it was the brooch! Had the Brownie really just returned it? Or had it been there the whole time?

And even stranger, when Merida examined the gem more closely, she saw that something was very different about it.

The next evening, Merida presented the birthday brooch to her mother.

“My favourite gem, set in a silver thistle!” Elinor exclaimed. “What better luck could I have than to have you as my daughter?”

Beaming, Merida knew that everything was set right, and things were positively ... perfect.
